FEERUARY 8, 1968

Honorable Robert F. Kennedy United States Senate Washington, D. C. 20510

Dear Senator Kennedy:

I have received your inquiry of January 31, on behalf of Mrs. Anne D. Higgins. Mrs. Higgins inquired whether the United States withdrew its missiles from Turkey in exchange for the Soviet Union's agreeing not to ship war materials to Cuba.

The United States did not make any agreement with the Soviet Union regarding the dismantling of Jupiter missile installations in Turkey at the time of the Cuban missile crisis in October 1962. The decision to deactivate missiles in Turkey and Italy, which also had Jupiter bases, was a part of the United States policy of increasing NATO's power by introducing modern weapons technology wherever it will be most effective militarily. In line with this policy, agreement was reached with the Governments of Turkey and Italy to deploy the Polaris submarine in the Mediterranean and to deactivate the Jupiter missiles located in those two countries. In recognition of the obsolescent nature of the Jupiter missile, the United States had initiated talks with the Government of Turkey on this matter in 1961.

I hope this information will be helpful to you in replying to Mrs. Higgins.

Sincerely yours,

William B. Macomber, Jr. Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations
